Girls, as follows:
First-For the reimbursement of the equipment account, for apparatus, hose, etc., for extinguishing fire, amounting to $142.52.

etc., for extinguishing fire, amounting to $142.52.

Second—To pay for two refrigerators, costing $140, on the ground that the above expenses were incurred for articles which are a necessary part of the building.

In replying to the request, Robert J. Tracewell, Comptroller of the Treasury, said that it was a well settled rule of construction that when an appropriation was made for a specific object that appropriation was exclusive, although there might be another appropriation which in the absence of the specific appropriation, might be used.

"In the present case," said Mr. Tracewell, "the appropriations for the new building and for furnishing and equipping the same are distinct and exclusive, and cannot be made to supplement each other. Your question must, therefore, be any sweeted in the negative."

A Charge of Desertion.
